COMMON HAZARDS AT CONSTRUCTION SITES

Nearly 8 million people work at approximately 919,000 construction sites across the nation on any given day. The fatal injury rate for the construction industry is higher than the national average for all industries. These are some of the commonly cited hazards found at construction sites across the United States.

- Falls
- Stairways & Ladders
- Scaffolding
- Electrical
- Trenching & Excavation
- Motor Vehicle Safety/Highway Work Zones

Falls

Falls consistently account for the greatest number of fatalities in the construction industry. Employees who work six or more feet above a lower level must use fall protection.

Stairways & Ladders

Working on and around stairways and ladders can be hazardous. Stairways and ladders are major sources of injuries and fatalities among construction workers.

Scaffolding

Scaffolding hazards continue to rank high on the list of the most frequently cited standard violations in the construction industry. Protecting workers from scaffold-related accidents could prevent some of the 4,500 injuries and over 60 deaths every year.

Electrical

Almost all construction employers must consider the hazards associated with electricity (i.e., electric shock, electrocution, fires, and explosions). OSHA requires that employees not work near any part of an electrical power circuit unless protected.

Trenching & Excavation

Two workers are killed every month in trench collapses. Employers must comply with the trenching and excavation requirements of 29 CFR 1926.651 and 1926.652 or comparable OSHA-approved state plan regulations.

Motor Vehicle Safety/Highway Work Zones

The majority of fatalities that occur in road construction work zones in the United States involve a worker being struck by a piece of construction equipment or other vehicle.
